Excerpt: .as clear as a bell; and she warbles with the facility of a nightingale. Whilst her execution is of the most brilliant kind, nothing can approach the exquisite propriety and aptness of her cadenzai; they always come in at the happy moment; she never sacrifices sense to sound. Her simplicity of style is, indeed, most rigid; but this charming nataralnccs it is which goes so home to the hearts of her hearers. Her trill is perfect--truly marvellous--proving that she must have an intuitive knowledge of her art, as well as the beat culture. Her style is full of impulse; or, as the French have it, of abandon. In the absence of all stage trickery, or conventionalism, may be distinguished this child of genius. Her opening eavatina in the presence of Amina s friends and her finale are contrasted with the highest skill. In the...
