The average class of the stars actually entering into each group is given in the third column of the Table. The figure following the letter is a mean of the numbers, taken with respect to the principal letter, indicating the subdivisions to which the several stars of each group belong. The letters, a and p, have not been regarded. The fourth, fifth, and sixth columns give the sum, the mean, and the average deviation of the differences for each group. The Table shows the progressive change of the mean in the order, B, A, F, G, K, M, and indicates a corresponding change in the amount of blue or actinic light. Stars of Class B possess more actinic light than stars of Class M, the difference being nearly two magnitudes, corresponding to a ratio of about six...
